NEW YORK – October 4, 2018 – Today Teen Vogue announced details of the next Teen Vogue Summit. Following the success of past events in Los Angeles and New York City, the Teen Vogue Summit will return to Los Angeles on November 30 and December 1 with a power-packed lineup of change-makers from the worlds of sports, fashion, music, beauty, technology, film and television, public service, and more. Curated by the editors of Teen Vogue, the Summit is a gathering of young people motivated to change the world. Speakers will share their stories, get real about their journeys, and inspire attendees to effect change in their own lives and communities.

Throughout the two-day Summit, attendees will visit some of the boldest companies of 2018, participate in hands-on workshops led by industry experts, enjoy captivating keynote conversations, learn from the most daring and successful entrepreneurs, mingle with their favorite stars and meet with powerful change-makers. Participants will have the opportunity to customize their own agendas in order to create the experience they find most beneficial.

The Teen Vogue Summit will begin on Friday, November 30, with a day of exclusive Career Immersions at the offices of some of LA's most exciting and inventive companies. Attendees will be immersed in day-to-day business as part of intimate workshops, meet company leaders, explore the creative spaces, and walk away with valuable insight and advice for the future. Participating companies include: Awesomeness, Depop, Levi's, LYFT, NBC, Okay Goodnight, Snap, Step Up, The Wall Group and WME.

The 72andSunny Creative Campus will serve as the site for the second day of the Teen Vogue Summit on Saturday, December 1, hosting a full day of inspiring conversations, small group workshops and mentor sessions, performances, and more—plus plenty of opportunities to recharge (both minds and phones) throughout the day. Main-stage keynote conversations will include 23-time Grand Slam tennis champion, entrepreneur, fashion icon and philanthropist Serena Williams, as well as actor and style icon Cara Delevingne, who will team with global sports brand PUMA to honor Teen Vogue's 2018 class of 21 Under 21 during the event. Actor and activist Storm Reid—who spoke at the debut Teen Vogue Summit in December 2017—will return as host of Saturday's program. Other featured speakers include actor and activist Eva Longoria; Olympic fencer Ibtihaj Muhammad; actor and activist Terry Crews; actor Kiersey Clemons; actor Tommy Dorfman; Backstage Capital founder and managing partner Arlan Hamilton; journalist and motivational speaker Noor Tagouri; Blavity cofounder and CEO Morgan DeBaun; Bumble chief brand officer Alex Williamson; Premme cofounder Nicolette Mason; actor Vanessa Morgan; actor Josie Totah; YouTube beauty guru Patrick Starr; actor and singer Luna Blaise; actor and singer Garrett Clayton; LGBTQ+ activist and digital influencer Gigi Gorgeous; YouTube star and beauty activist Jackie Aina; comedian Jay Versace; YouTube star and fashion designer Jenn Im; The Modist creative director and founding member Sally Matthews; actor and social media star Rickey Thompson; Drybar founder Alli Webb; actor and content creator Claudia Sulewski; and YouTube star Eva Gutowski, among others.

The Teen Vogue Summit includes official partners bareMinerals, Google's Made with Code, LOLA, PBteen, PlayStation, PUMA and Victoria's Secret PINK, in collaboration with 72andSunny. Teen Vogue will also collaborate with several charitable organizations whose missions are aligned with the Summit—Fulfillment Fund, LA Promise Fund/Girls Build and Step Up—to offer complimentary Saturday tickets to local community members.
