

CONDÉ NAST NAMES JOSEPH LIBONATI CHIEF COMMUNICATIONS OFFICER

NEW YORK – November 12, 2018 – Condé Nast president and CEO Bob Sauerberg today named Joseph Libonati chief communications officer for the company. In his newly expanded role, Libonati will oversee the development and execution of all internal and external communications strategies for Condé Nast. He previously served as senior vice president of corporate communications.

“As Condé Nast continues to transform into a full-fledged media company, strategic communication is vital to every aspect of our organization,” said Sauerberg. “Condé Nast is the most influential company in the industry, with the world’s most iconic brands, innovative content and leading digital, video and data capabilities. Joe is a big part of how we are communicating that to our advertising partners, the creative community and our audiences.”

Libonati’s career in communications spans more than two decades. He joined Condé Nast in 2013 as vice president of corporate communications. Prior to that, he served as senior vice president at Rubenstein Communications, where he worked with a number of high-profile media clients including Paramount Pictures, USA Network, Zynga and Viacom. Before that, he managed the New York team of Principal Communications Group, overseeing clients including Google, YouTube and Machinima. He also spent seven years at NBCUniversal, where he managed corporate communications strategies for the company’s cable portfolio and digital programming divisions.

Libonati began his career in communications at PMK and later, ID/PR, where he represented some of the entertainment industry’s most widely-known and award-winning actors, musicians, directors and producers.
